

When news of the assassination of President Kennedy hit New Haven, the city palled. These photos depict the sadness. At left, woman holds her hand to head in grief. Mayor Richard C. Lee was visibly shaken. Flags, like the one above, flew at half-mast. Downtown, thousands flooded newsstands to read accounts of the death as seen at Church and Chapel Streets. Tears were shed freely as shown at right. Below, the expression of Patrolman Nicholas Pastore typifies that on the faces of thousands when they learned the President was dead. City reaction was one of disbelief, followed by shocked indignation.
